Select an Organizational Structure

Informal Options

Informal businesses require no filing with the Indiana Secretary of State. Although “informal”, businesses operating as sole proprietorships (self-employed) or general partnerships should register a “doing business as” (dba) or “assumed business name” with the county and state. Optionally, they may also register (free) for an Employee Identification Number (EIN) which may be used for any business-related activities in lieu of using a personal social security number(s).

- Sole Proprietorship: One person who conducts business for profit. The owner assumes complete responsibility for all liabilities and debts of the business. Income is reported as part of owner's personal income. As an informal entity, there can be no formal payroll. The primary risk of operating a “self-employed” sole proprietor is that if sued or pulled into litigation, personal assets may be ordered to fulfill a settlement or judgement to pay. The name used for conducting business is not protected in any way, so others could do business under the same name.
- General Partnership: Similar to a Sole Proprietorship, except two or more individuals serve as co-owners of a for-profit business. Partners are responsible for the liabilities and debts of the entity. Income is reported as part of each partner's personal income.

Formal Options

Formal business structures are typically appropriate for businesses will have employees, are subject to payment of unemployment taxes, and/or are at a higher risk of litigation related to business activities. These structures require filing of organizational documents with Corporations Division of the Indiana Secretary of State.

- Limited Liability Company (LLC): A formal association which combines the advantage of protecting personal assets and single taxation. An LLC is a formal version of a “self-employed” status. An LLC has members (which is typically the sole proprietor/founder) instead of shareholders. Members are protected from liabilities and debts of the LLC, so personal assets cannot be sought to settle a judgement as a result of litigation. Filing as an LLC also provides the ability to establish a business name that will be protected from another formal entity using the same name in the same state. Taxes are still filed on individual (member) returns, similar to a sole proprietorship. As an LLC, an entity is not required to register a “doing business as” (dba) or “assumed business name” with the county or state.

The following formal corporations are generally used when an entity will carry a payroll and/or is subject to paying unemployment taxes and may offer a lower tax rate at higher levels of net income (anectodally estimated at $75,000 or more).

- Corporation: A legal entity owned by shareholders which is created by filing Articles of Incorporation. The corporation assumes all liabilities and debts of the corporation. Shareholders are protected from the corporation's debts and liabilities. Income is taxed twice: 1) at the corporate level; and 2) at the employee level when a wage is paid.
- S-Corporation: After filing Articles of Incorporation, a corporation may seek to obtain S Corporation status for federal income tax purposes. The income is taxed only once: at the employee level. To qualify, the corporation may not have more than 75 shareholders and must submit IRS Form 2553 to the IRS.
- Non-Profit Corporation: A corporation whose purpose is to engage in activities which do not provide financial profit to the benefit of its members. Non-profits must obtain non-profit or tax exempt status from the IRS and Indiana Department of Revenue.
- Limited Partnership (LP): A partnership with at least one General Partner and one Limited Partner. General Partner assumes all liabilities and debts of the partnership while the limited partner's liability is limited to the amount invested. Income is taxed in the same way as a General Partnership.
- Limited Liability Partnership (LLP): A General Partnership which elects to operate as an LLP. Partners are protected from many debts and liabilities. Registration must be filed with the Indiana Secretary of State. Income is taxed in the same way as a General Partnership.
